DUCHESSE OF ALBANY IS DEAD AT INNSBRUCK

Was Visiting Her Son, Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha.

LONDON, Sept. 2 (Associated Press).—The Duchess of Albany died yesterday at Innsbruck, in the Tyrol. It was announced here to-day. The Duchess was visiting her son, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha.

The Duchess of Albany was Princess Helene of Waldeck-Pyrmont. In 1882 she married Leopold George Duncan, Duke of Albany, the eighth child and youngest son of Queen Victoria. The Duke died suddenly in the south of France in 1884, leaving a daughter, Arthur Charles Edward, born in July, 1884, who succeeded to the dukedom of Albany and who in 1900 became Duke of Saxe-Coburg on the death of his uncle. She was born in 1861.

The Duchess was very popular in England. She lived until recently in a palatial country house at Claremont, which for some weeks has been abandoned. She was a devoted mother of her son, the Duke of Albany, and a devoted friend of her daughter, the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha.

The Duchess was active in her work and retained the confidence of the British public.
